LOUISVILLE, Ky. (WHAS11) -- The Kentucky Science Center is celebrating the first birthday of Science in Play by taking the popular exhibit on the road.

Thanks to donations from PNC and Genentech, the Science Center was able to design a smaller, mobile version called Science in Play 2-Go. It will travel to different areas of Kentucky beginning this fall.

Science in Play lets kids build their own roller coasters, play with shapes and more.

The permanent Science in Play exhibit is getting an upgrade with a new water table that's designed for kids, by kids.

It opens this Saturday as the Science Center hosts its first birthday party for Science in Play complete with a marching band, confetti cannons, dancing, and of course, birthday cake.
